- First calendar printing is free of charge for families who meet the guidelines: one or more children under the age of 7 from low income or low literacy backgrounds; have limited community resources
- Programming should stimulate family reading activities and increase skills for emerging readers
- Aside from the one box of 45 calendars per county, if you have a program where the audience fits into these guidelines, they are not going to receive the calendar from any other source (i.e. a partner like First Steps), and you are willing to provide evaluative data at the end of your program or event, please fill out the information below. Limit one additional box of 45 ct. per program.

General Calendar Information: South Carolina Day by Day is a perpetual calendar, an undated calendar beginning in September with no time-sensitive content. Schools, daycare centers, and agencies typically begin their programs in September so it is easier and more effective to start the calendar activities in conjunction with the new learning year. Each month has a theme around which books, songs, activities, health information, arts and cultural events, and family wellness information is centered. South Carolina Day by Day also highlights South Carolina: featuring state symbols, nature and historical sites, state events, represents the multiculturalism of the state, and includes original artwork by Spartanburg artist Helen Correll.
